Dear Paul:

Thanks for your note of August 30. Most of the other final revisions are in, but we can give you another two or three weeks to revise your chapter, particularly since it is my fault that you have not been supplied earlier with suggestions for the revision.

Mrs. Dearborn, in my old office, still has the last master copy of your chapter. I am asking her to show it to you so you can identify the draft, and then to mail it to me at once along with some notes I have filed with it on possible changes. I will let you have my comments back within a day or two of the time I receive this package from Mrs. Dearborn.

I am glad you had a good summer. Except for a brief trip to [REDACTED] last week I have been sticking to my sticky desk down here in the hope of getting things well enough organized so that I could begin to think about a date for returning. I am hopeful, although it will be several more months in any case.

Best regards.

Yours,
